WRWA Weather Update #1

OKLAHOMA CITY, December 27, 2015 – Will Rogers World Airport is open with many flights still operating, but delays and cancellations are increasing. There are several afternoon departures still scheduled, however these departures will depend on whether the flight arrives from its originating destination, Oklahoma City weather conditions at time of departure, and weather conditions at other airports. The airlines are beginning to cancel arrivals this afternoon and this evening in anticipation of tonight's snow and ice. This will not only impact today's arrivals but will result in numerous cancellations tomorrow (Monday) morning.

Currently, American Airlines, Southwest Airlines and United Airlines are waiving change fees to allow customers the opportunity to change their flights if scheduled to fly today or tomorrow.

Airport maintenance crews have been working since early this morning clearing runways and taxiways to keep the airport operational. Additional airport and parking staff are working to clear sidewalks and roads in front of the terminal, as well as parking lanes.

The airport urges anyone traveling to WRWA today or tomorrow to check flight status prior to coming to the airport. Check flight status at flyokc.com/trakaflight or check the airline's websites or social media sites.
